Handsome Designs In Corded

Tailor Gowns.

POPULAR PLAID DRESS GOODS.

Novelties In Various Fabrics—The Newest Colors-New Uses For Velvet-Modified Bustles In Use-Pretty Ten Gowns-Even-

[Copyright, 1897, by American Press Asso-ciation.]

One of the handsomest designs in tailor dressmaking is where the entire skirt and the full blouse waist are corded at regular intervals all over the surface in a round and round pattern. No color save the tan of the fine broadcloth was seen on one cos tume, but these little ridges, with stiff cord sewed in, seemed to give it all it needed to make a most elegant finish. No one but a postgraduate in the art of dressmaking should make an attempt at cord ing a tailor gown. The preferred colors for fine cloth and venetian and also whipcord tailor suits are stone gray, tan, mode biscuit and dark heliotrope. Some imperial and cadet blues are also seen. dark, however, does not show up well when made, and the light is very delicate when made, and the light is very deflected and solis quickly.

Overskirts and draped tunies are among the latest additions to the decoration of tailor costumes. These overskirts are precisely like those in vogue 10 and 11 years ago, the sole difference being in the braiding new mit upon the instead of the ing now put upon them instead of the Persian bands of old and the bordering of Persian bands of old and the bordering of velvet or silk. These now are in shawl shape, in draped tablier and in long tunic form, caught up on one side in rich, heavy folds. A few are in the shape of a peplum and are left open at the sides or in front and fastened across with, some arrangement or other to match the trimming on the west of the graph.

ment or other to match the trimming on the rest of the gown.

Just now the plaid dress goods are seen in unusually large numbers, but the clan plaids with their prenounced colors are for the most part relegated to children's wear and very stylish shirt waists. The darker, softer and more subdued colors are preferred for outdoor costumes, the dark blues, greens, browns and grays leading in favor. Velours and poplins are the leading plaids for very smart costumes, but cheviot, cloth, camel's hair and boucles are better liked by the conservative gentlewomen. The velours plaids are gentlewomen. The velours plaids are shown in enormous patterns of green and blue, with narrow lines of light silk upon them, like yellow and white or very pale blue and dark red or old gold. Velvet is, as it always was, the most suitable combination and trimming to use with plaid, but some of the dark and frouzy blouses now are garnished with braid in military loops and frogs.

There are some novelty woolen stuffs There are some noverty wooten stuns where the solid color is of twill in pale tints, overthrown with a raised design in black wool, which gives it the appearance of vermicelli design in braiding. Sometimes graduated stripes in bayadere design are woren on, and in still other cases sign are woven on, and in still other cases the black pattern is woven in chevron lines. Still others are bordered with a design of alternate blocks of woolly black and the dress material. Some new zibeline and camel's hair stuffs have borders of deep wool astrakhan. Ottoman cloth is new to this generation, which is the statement of the stateme new to this generation and is a durable and handsome fabric and is most often produced in solid color. Ottoman of the best quality is used for fine tailor costumes. It has no luster, but a round stiffish corded surface. A few pieces of ottoman cloth have a mixture of threads in the weaving like covert suiting. Others again have knots and tufts of long silky black hairs. Browns with the black knots make up into most comfortably looking gowns for the winter. There are many novelties in zibe-lines, some of the newest having a mottled foundation in gray and black or gray and green, etc., but all with the soft filaments lying like natural bairs over the surface.

Among the newest colors are purples Among the newest colors are purples of every shade and reds from bright crimson to deep ox blood. Maroon, which has been out of date many years, and pencock blue are also among the new colors. Navy blue, yate, callet and imperial are among the fashionable blues, but bluet, violet, sky and baby, besides ultramarine, are seen. Russian green, reseda green, rush and hunter's green are all seen in the cloths and velvets, besides the silks and ribbons. lieve that the durned huss deserved

Speaking of ribbons calls to mind a piece of new taffeta. It was three inches wide and had six stripes of brilliant scarlet and no less brilliant emerald green with a fine line of cream satin between the two colors. It was too bright a contrast for ordinary eyesight, but it was only one of thousands of pieces quite as star one of thousands of pieces quite as star-tling for millinery purposes. The roman stripes for sashes and in the silks for waists have colors quite as raw, but somehow they are arranged so that the general result is rich without being inharmonious. Some of the finest of the new Scotch plaid silks have the lines marking the outlines of the design made of black velvet. This gives an unusually rich effect, and this peplum absolutely require a little artificial support, and no skirt can be successfully draped without it. Draped skirts are sure ly returning to us. Several of the hand-somest gowns of this senson show decided attempts to restore the old shawl and wrinkled fronts. The shawl points in some cases are bordered with fur and have a head and three little fur tails at the Tea gowns are very pretty and as a general rule not of such sumptuously extravagant style as they have been. I have teen but one of plush. That was of elecreen but one of plush. The front of the gown was full and draped richly across the bust and again at the waist line. There was a loose belt of gold waist line. There was a loose belt of a links, set with imitation turquoises should have said that the front was of china crape of a pink so faint that it was almost white. Velvet as a material for street dresses. wraps and coats-incidentally blouses to -and for ceremonious evening require-ments and hats and bonnets is unusually popular this winter and will be more so. A new use for it has been found in mak ing portions or entire waists to the flimsi est and thinnest of dancing dresses for young ladies. mun or use net in the same snade are beautiful and make the wearer look like a new kind of canary bird. Pink, blue and green are also seen. Not very much vel-vet is needed, but it certainly is effective when well arranged.

Nearly all the gowns now made look bet-ter for a slight distension in the back, and almost every handsome skirt has at least a tiny horsehair cushion set in the back at the belt. Many have regulation bustles reaching all the way down, only not very pronounced. The tunic overskirt and the The sleeves hung nearly to the feet, and the whole was lined with blush pink taffeta. The most popular tea gowns are made of cashmere or camel's hair in some delicate color and more simply trimmed. A gray one, with a little steel beading, or, if the maker is handy with her needle, a little embroidery of such flowers as would go well with the color would be restre go well with the color, would be pretty. Fur, lace and ribbons are all suitable for the decoration of ten gowns. I notice, the decoration of tea gowns. I notice, too, among those decorations many fancy theodorn belts of metal, and also large, thick cords, with tassels, acorns or balls at the ends. Ribbons promise to be in better demand for trimmings than they have been, but only the fine satin or grosgrain ribbons are suitable for handsome gowns. The garter snake taffetas do well enough for everyday millinery, but only self color everyday millinery, but only self col-ored ribbon is employed for the other re-quirements. Sash ribbons are sometimes in delicately figured taffetas and also ro-man stripes, but few care for them when so much daintier effects can be obtained by using wide moirs or heavy saths ribby using wide moire or heavy satin rib-bon edged with full ruffles of chiffon or silk muslin.

One tea gown for home wear on all or-One ten gown for nome wear on an ordinary occasions was of mauve cashmere. The back was watteau shape and the front falling full and loose from a pointed yoke. There was a rich purple ribbon belt to tie in front. An immense collar laid over the shoulders and the ends reached to the waist line. This was embroidered in dark waist line. This was embroidered in dark green and gold floss, and was edged with a ruffle of lace. The lace ruffles turned to jabot folds and went on down to the bottom. This was pretty and graceful. There was a tea jacket of pale blue china silk. This had a deep hem and a row of dark blue baby ribbon run through the hem-stitching. The sleeves were long and loose and bordered with double ruffles of lace with pale blue ribbons. The neck was fin-ished with row upon row of alternate black and white lace. It was exceedingly tasteful. It was loosely belted with rather wide pale blue ribbon. These tea jackets are very popular. Many are made more like an empire coat or an outdoor open jacket, but the material, the lace and ribbons show plainly their intended use.

Evening gowns are just now the topic of greatest interest in fashion, as the most of the other garments have been already purchased. Two lovely dresses may well be copied. One is in pink taffeta with a silk mull overdress, with a gauffering around the bottom and a draped waist and Marcon chrysanthemums ecorate the corsage. The ribbon decorate the corsage. The other was of apple green taffeta, with 18 lines of white insertion running the length of the skirt. White lace rulles are put on the bottom to form tabs. A similar arrangement is at the neck, with a pufling of white tulle at the teek, with a plantage of which tulle at the top. A changeable crimson and cream toffeta silk sash was made to the in the back. A sush was also put at the back of the pink dress, made, however, of the silk muil. MATE LEROY.

THE CLOVE TREE.

How the Ends Are Prepared For the Uses of Commerce.

The clove tree is a native of the Molucca islands and belongs to the far spread family of myrtles. It is a tall, very handsome evergreen, with ovate, oblong leaves and purplish flowers, arranged in corymbs on short jointed The flowers are produced in great profusion, and when they appear, which is at the beginning of the rainy eason, they are in the form of elongated, greenish buds. These unexpanded buds are the cloves of commerce, which derive their name from the Spanish word clavo, "a nail," so called from the real or fancied resemblance of the

Sometimes the clove fruit appears in commerce in a dried state, under the name of "mother cloves." It has an odor and flavor similar to cloves, but is mach weaker.

The flower buds are beaten from the tree and are dried by the smoke of wood fires and afterward by the sun. If the bads remain on the trees, the calices gradually swell, the embryo seeds enlarge and the pungent properties of the cloves are to a great degree dissipated.

Cloves consist of two parts, a round head, which is, in fact, the flower rolled up, inclosing a number of small filaments, and the four points that surround the flower and form the flower cup of the unripe seed vessel. When they are soaked for a short time in hot water, the flowers soften and readily unroll, so that all of the parts may be The entire clove tree is highly aromatic, and the foot stalks of the leaves have nearly the same pungent quality as the calyx of the flower. - Philadel phia Times.
